Sanna Katariina Elfving joined the School of Law in October 2009 as a PhD student. Her research interests include the interaction between European Union environmental law and International Trade Law of the World Trade Organization. Sanna holds a MA (Distinction) in European Politics, Business and Law from the University of Surrey. Her master's dissertation focused on the transatlantic trade disputes involving the environment and the use of the precautionary principle.

Before joining the School, she was a trainee with the Public Affairs Consultancy Company and Think Tank called the Centre in Brussels, Belgium where she carried out, among other things research in the field of the environment, human health, development aid, and energy; as well as participated in informal roundtable discussions on energy between the European Union and the United States.
